Creativity Needed!

Come help shape the future of public art along Rosemead Blvd. on February 8 and 15

Date: February 1, 2012

The Temple City Public Arts Advisory Group is looking for residents who are interested in contributing ideas to the city's new focus on public art.

The upcoming Rosemead Blvd. Enhancement Project includes many opportunities for public art, starting first with corridor light pole banners and inspirational quotes that will be incorporated in various areas like sidewalks, planters and seating nodes.

Tasked by the City Council to shape the future of Temple City's public art program, the advisory group is looking for input on what the banners could look like and what the quotes would say.

"You do not need to be an artist, just be interested and excited about enhancing the look of the city through public art," said group member Kathy Keelin. "We hope to bring a unified image of Temple City by having as wide participation as possible throughout the process."

Input meetings will be held February 8 and 15, 6:30 to 8:30 p.m., in the City Hall Community Room, 9701 Las Tunas Dr.

Those unable to attend the meetings can submit their comments and ideas via email, templecitypublicart@gmail.com.
